Kooyong Estate Pinot Noir 2012 – Reviews

Australian Wine Companion, 2015 Edition

Good colour, deep and bright; spiced plum aromas follow through onto the palate, which has impressive drive to its seamless stream of fruit, tannins and oak. Not ready yet, however.

Stylish and elegant, this supple and complex pinot has a meaty, earthy bouquet of sweet red cherries, briar and tightly knit, gamey oak backed by suggestions of duck fat and dried herbs. It's long and silky-smooth and fleshy, with a tightly controlled and sweetly oaked presence of small red and black berries underpinned by nuances of dried herbs and tomato, dusty, kernel-like tannins towards a finish of lingering smoky nuances of sweet cherries and underbrush.

Pale to medium ruby coloured, the 2012 Pinot Noir presents vibrant red cherries, violets and roses notes with hints of Ceylon tea and cinnamon stick. Medium-bodied with great elegance, it has mouth-filling red berry flavours with plenty of complex subtext and very fine tannins, finishing long and refreshing.

Strawberry and red cherry fruits, beetroot, brambles and a hint of charcuterie unite seamlessly in a tangy and finely textured vintage. Tannin grip and acid tang promise good potential in the cellar.

Exotic, woody autumn leaf smelling, prosciutto, with golden plums and poached pear: stunning. Smell the fruit intensity. It delivers on the palate too; mouth-filling wide, and long. Mouth-aromas of strawberry pips and black cherries. Serous red.

Dark crimson colour. Packed with spice and dark cherry/berried fruit. Gently but insistently tannic. Persistent through the finish. Complex but seamlessly so. Unafraid of a herbal/bitter twang to the aftertaste. Lines all its ducks in a meticulous row.
