A never-fail rendition of pinot gris. Plenty of poached, candied and fresh pears all spiced up with ginger and cinnamon. A fine layer of lees adding to some palate weight and a light phenolic pull on the finish. Savoury, moreish and refreshing. Lovely drinking here.

This routinely delivers more than its fair share of flavour, and it does again here. Candied fruits of various description, pear characters, chalk and sweet spices mingle with modest inputs from toasted almonds and (just) flint. It's refreshing and bodied at once. It's good.

Notes of spice, moss and white florals add interest on the nose. The palate is textural, the flavours glide across, signing off with a seamless departure. This is a well balanced Pinot Gris with enough complexity to lure you back for another glass.
